Prof .Sindhe Jaganath. R . Chairman Dept of Studies And Research in Sociology Gulbarga University, Kalaburagi, Changing social institutions involves transforming or modifying existing social structures, norms, and practices to better serve the needs of individuals and society. There are some key aspects of changing social institutions: Types of Social Institutions Family: Changes in family structures, roles, and relationships. Education: Reforms in educational systems, curricula, and teaching methods. Religion: Evolutions in religious beliefs, practices, and institutions. Government: Changes in political systems, policies, and governance structures. Economy: Transformations in economic systems, markets, and industries. Globalization has significantly impacted family structures and dynamics worldwide, including in India. Changes in Family Structure include a shift from traditional joint families to nuclear families, with increased migration for work leading to geographically dispersed families .This transformation has resulted in Increased independence for women .With more job opportunities, women are gaining financial independence and contributing to family incomes. Changing gender roles. Women are taking on new roles, and men are adapting to these changes, leading to more equality in relationships. Rise of individualism: Globalization has fostered a sense of individualism, leading to more people prioritizing personal goals over traditional family expectations.

Dr.M.N.Sultanpur Principal and HOD Department Of Sociology Smt. Chinnamma Basappa Patil Arts and Commerce College Chincholi, has explained the briefly about the Changing social institutions involves transforming or modifying existing social structures, Family Structure, The traditional joint family system is giving way to nuclear families, especially in urban areas Education, Modern education has expanded, promoting social mobility and empowering marginalized groups. Religious practices are being reconfigured, with a growing emphasis on spirituality and alternative religious movements. Related to Caste System today also the caste system remains influential in every field, there are efforts to challenge and change it, with laws and initiatives aimed at promoting social equality. Drivers of Change: Modernization India's economic modernization and technological advancements are transforming social institutions. Globalization Global influences are shaping Indian culture and society, contributing to changes in social institutions. Social Movements Movement advocating for social justice, equality, and human rights are driving changes in social institutions Overall, social institutions in India are evolving, reflecting the country's complex and dynamic social landscape.

Dr. Basavaraj Naganna Guest lecturer Dept of Sociology: extends Thanks to resource person, dear teachers and the principal of our college who have come delivered special lecturer on changing social Institutions for B.A IIIrd Semester students. And also expressed the gratitudes to all students who were presented over the special lecture.
