FOREWORD

I'm pleased to hear from Dr. M. N. Sultanpur, the organizing secretary, that your efforts to gather full-length papers for presentation at the upcoming two-day National Conference "Indian Knowledge System and AYUSH for Viksit Bharat," sponsored by the ICSSR, in Chincholi on April 24 and 25, 2025, have received an overwhelmingly positive response. For all of us, this is a historic time because we are successfully implementing the academic session model of any international conference. Perhaps receiving a full-length paper is a practice at the ICSSR conference. However, by publishing them in conference proceedings and making the published copy accessible to the relevant parties, we are taking things a step further.

Delegates and participants eventually require a word of gratitude for their contributions and presentations of research publications, as well as for their fruitful conversations and recommendations of pertinent ideas. It will improve the subject matter and enable the teaching community and future research academics instill a few new research strategies.

The first edition of "Mission IKS 1947 Visoin AYUSH @ 2047," edited by Dr. M.N. Sultanpur, is a valuable contribution to the sociological study community. In addition to examining concepts on a number of related issues, this conference proceedings shed light on the researcher's interdisciplinary approach, which appears to be crucial in addressing contemporary society's problems. In this sense, the proceedings are important because they also highlighted recently emerging social issues and solutions that will pave the way for Viksit Bharat by 2047.

I congratulate Dr. M.N. Sultanpur for editing the chosen papers presented during the two-day National Conference of Sociology, which effectively brought out the conference proceedings. The objective of these conference proceedings will be fulfilled if it inspires sincere interest in applying social theory to the pressing issue on the one hand, and the guidance it provides to planners, policymakers, and other interested parties on the other.

PREFACE

Indian society is well-known for its traditional agrarian economy and occupational structure. Indian society has seen significant economic transformations since independence and the adoption of the Indian constitution, progressing from a simple to a complex economy. Indian civilization, which is renowned for its magnificent agrarian, environmentally friendly economy and has seen dynamic changes in the polity, has undergone transformation from traditional to modern, from pre-industrial to post-industrial and beyond. The twenty-first century has seen several developments, including advancements in technology and industrial growth in all areas of life.

Thirty Five scientific and research articles focusing on the transformation of social, political, and economic inclusion, education and skill development for Viksit Bharat, and the role of all Indians in achieving the vision of Viksit Bharat @ 2047 are included in the current conference proceedings, which are titled "Mision IKS 1947 Visoin AYUSH @ 2047." The articles also address the changing social empowerment in the future of the country, with the majority of them concentrating on the socio-economic political challenges of the Viksit Bharat vision and other related aspects. The role of local self-governance and the government in promoting environmentally friendly development for its residents was the subject of several of the pieces in this edited collection.

It's also important to note that the papers in this Conference proceeding attempt to examine the development activities from various perspectives and emphasize practical recommendations for the region's environmentally responsible economic advancement. The current conference proceedings have made significant attempts to establish solutions that work. It will be helpful to planners and organizers who work in the field of environmentally friendly developmental activities in order to do so more efficiently.

Lastly, I want to congratulate the authors and co-authors of the research articles that were submitted to the current conference proceedings. I trust their efforts to produce such important articles and conference proceedings that are more helpful in the field of "Mission IKS and Vision AYUSH @2047" in Indian society are serious and successful.
